RE: Robert Carr Resignation

This week, Robert Carr resigned from his position as Chief Scientist at Ashton-Tate.

As the creator of the basic Framework technology, Robert was instrumental in helping Ashton-Tate pioneer a new market segment in integrated software. As a result, he helped the company position itself as a broad-based developer of microcomputer software.

Robert will certainly be missed, but we wish him the best in his plans to pursue entrepreneurial opportunities.

If you receive a press inquiry on Robert's resignation, please forward the call to Gail Pomerantz, Director of Corporate Communications (X7345).
