NEWS RELEASE .....

FLEXPRACTICE PROVIDES LEGAL MARKET WITH DOCUMENT ASSEMBLY SOFTWARE

The only software in its category approved by the American Bar Association

ROCHESTER, New York, March 10, 1989 -- Integrated Concepts has introduced FlexPractice, a legal document-generating system that allows lawyers, associates and others in the legal profession to quickly and easily produce a wide range of legal documents. Fourteen editions are available, covering such areas as family and corporate law, wills, real estate closings, partnership agreements and medical malpractice.

FlexPractice is used in conjunction with Framework III, integrated decision support software from Ashton-Tate. FlexPractice takes advantage of Framework's word processing, spreadsheet, database, outlining, graphics, telecommunications and electronic mail capabilities for document organization, modification and presentation. FlexPractice is easily accessed via a menu selection in Framework III.

David Hill, President of Integrated Concepts, said, "The introduction of FlexPractice offers lawyers the efficiency and cost-effectiveness they need for their practices. The software is designed to ensure logically organized, consistent and accurate documents by prompting users to consider all alternatives and details. As a result, FlexPractice is the only document-assembly system approved by the American Bar Association."

Robert Kimball, Director of Product Management for Decision Support Products at Ashton-Tate, said "We're delighted that Integrated Concepts has chosen Framework III as the basis for FlexPractice. The combination provides the legal profession with a superior document assembly system that significantly enhances productivity."

FlexPractice Features

FlexPractice's library of legal documents is organized as a series of modules. Users select the appropriate module and FlexPractice prompts them with a sequence of questions and options. The program then assembles the document, replaces client-specific variables and numbers sections, subsections and pages. A final, customized document is then ready to print, save or edit. In addition, the document files can be exported to other word processors such as WordPerfect, MultiMate Advantage II and WordStar.

Specific features of the software include:

- Customized forms or documents can be added to existing libraries
- Completely new, customized libraries can be created and saved
- Help screens -- containing detailed descriptions and references to statutes and library materials -- are on-line
- Built-in utilities make customization quick and easy
- Reference manuals -- with the identification codes and associated text for every passage in a document -- are automatically generated

The legal text contained in FlexPractice follows New York legal requirements; modification for use in other states and Canada can be easily accomplished with Framework III.
